ARCHITECTURAL DESCRIPTION see continuation sheet

Describe architectural features. Evaluate the characteristics of this building in terms of other buildings within the community.

This simple Greek Revival house of two stories is laid out as an ell, with gable front (14 feet wide) facing the highway, and an ell of the same height and width extending northwards from the rear. Each gable end has simple returns. The front entrance opens onto the back ell through a modern doorway under a recently added porch. Window frames on both floors appear to be original, but sashes have replaced original 2/2 panes. A shed dormer on the south roof appears to be a later addition. At the rear of the ell is a 1975 one story kitchen with a large brick fireplace on the outside. The foundation of mortared stone is original, and contains a round Cape Cod cellar of the same material, topped with three rows of bricks. The two car garage began as a wooden shed of beaded lumber, perhaps interwar construction, was extended northward under a wooden frame.

HISTORICAL NARRATIVE see continuation sheet

Discuss the history of the building. Explain its associations with local (or state) history. Include uses of the building, and the role(s) the owners/occupants played within the community.

In the late 1800s, the land was owned by the Cammett family.

About 1900 this was a dairy farm, but all signs of barns have disappeared. From 1892 until his death in XXXX, the house was owned by Calvin "Callie" Fuller, who lived in the south side of the duplex mansard house across the road. Fuller rented this house out. The garage was used by Fuller for a screening machine for cranberries picked in the Fuller bogs across the road near Middle Pond. After World War II he rented the house to William Thew of Middleborough, who worked as a pinner, removing the pinfeathers from ducks at the Clear Lake Farm on Hamblin Pond. In the late 1950s it was rented to Roger Macomber.

Thew's son Edward bought the house and sold it to a retired auto parts worker Russ Savage, who lived here for 25 years. Thew bought the house back about 1975, and made the major alterations noted above, including removal of the two chimneys, demolition of the northeast kitchen and replacing it with the one story back extension, and conversion of the pantry into a bathroom. Recently he gave the house to his daughter Cindy, a resort manager.
