ARCHITECTURAL DESCRIPTION

see continuation sheet

Describe architectural features. Evaluate the characteristics of this building in terms of other buildings within the community.

The former Isaac Jones Boghouse is a two story barn-like building on a rectangular plan, the front facade facing west toward River Road. The foundation is concrete block, with the first floor abutting the hillside behind the house. It is clad in cedar shingle with barn-red trim. The centered entry door is enclosed by an unpainted wooden shed/porch. There is a pair of sliding glass doors on the south bay of the west facade. The gabled roof is irregular, dropping off slightly on the north end, and covered with composition shingle. At the south end is an exterior brick chimney, added recently. A few feet to the south is the only outbuilding, a two story studio/garage, on a rectangular plan, on concrete block foundation set into the back hillside. It is clad with vertical plywood siding. A one car door opens on the south side, the entry door and large plate glass window on the west.

HISTORICAL NARRATIVE

Discuss the history of the building. Explain its associations with local (or state) history. Include uses of the building, and the role(s) the owners/occupants played within the community.

The current owner, Marion Lovell Oldham, aged 92, with a good memory, moved the boghouse in 1963 from about 100 yards north, where it faced River Road next to the great oak tree. At the time she believed that it was 100 years old, an inheritance from cranberry grower Isaac Sprague Jones (1801-66) (Abner⁵, Isaac⁴⁻³, Jedidiah², Ralph¹). Jones was a pioneer cranberry grower in the area, and would have built such a storage shed at the height of his business.

His whole property was inherited by his only child, by Abigail "Nabby" H. Hamblin (1808-1894; Lewis⁵, Benjamin⁴⁻³, John², James¹), Lydia Ann (1832-1923) who married Orrin Mecarta (1844-1923). They lived in the west side of the Jones homestead, sharing it with her brother-in-law the postmaster Dennis Mecarta and his wife Harriet A. Crocker. Orrin and Dennis had come from Harwich, and Orrin took over running the bogs.

Again, on Lydia's death the estate went in the female line to the only survivors, the family of Harriet and Dennis's daughter Minnie Emily Mecarta, who died in the flu epidemic of 1919. She had married the chauffeur Winfred Boyden Lovell (d. 1948) of Wakeby, by whom she had the present owner Marion Lovell (b. 1909), a school teacher married to William Oldham of Providence. Marion inherited the Isaac Jones homestead. The other half of the estate went from Winfred to the daughter of his second wife, Mary (Freitas), Kathleen who married Clarence Farrar.

In 1963 Kathleen and Marion divided the property, and Marion moved the boghouse from its original location by the big oak tree south of the Jones Homestead to a site about 100 yards south on River Road, placing it as the second story of a new structure at ground level.

Marion's three heirs are her son James (b. 1946), daughter Merle Bisburg (b. 1943), and children of her deceased daughter Marcia Vann (1940-99). Marion has seven grandchildren, and 7 great-grandchildren.
