ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE (Describe important architectural features and Hall, evaluate in terms of other buildings within the community.)

Liberty is a simple 1½ story designed in the Greek Revival style in 1859. It is enclosed by a gable roof and trimmed by corner pilasters and an entablature. Windows are large, framed with projecting lintels and contain 12/12 sash; the gable window contains 6/6. The entry is located in a one story enclosed porch angled of one corner.

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE (Explain the role owners played in local or state history and how the building relates to the development of the community.)

The village hall was erected in 1859 and owned by a stock company of village residents. This follows a typical Barnstable pattern. Called "Liberty Hall" in 1866 as an item in the Barnstable Patriot indicates. The old horse sheds were still standing well into the 20th century. They were of open front design and used by both hall and church. In 1945 the hall was renovated by the Methodist church and used as a parish house. The church bought the building shortly after and sold to the Men's Club in 1960. During the 1890's the hall was used by the Dramatic Club of Marstons Mills. Most village activities requiring space took place in the hall.
